

knew it was wrong," said Garvick, who jumped at a chance "to put that sick SOB in prison."

To see him in prison made him feel safe. "Not just for myself, but for others," said Garvick. "It made me happy to know he wasn't going to hurt any more kids."

After his prison sentence, Hart was confined to the Minnesota Sex Offender Program, where he remains.

...victims described the results of these assaults: school problems, depression, isolation, confusion, and difficulties with trust and sexual relations."

Froelich spent the last three years looking for Jacob Wetterling, working with the FBI, talking to other victims, and actually digging. "You're all messed up," he said of victims of sexual assaults. "You can't think straight. You can't work.

"I don't need the limelight," added Froelich. "I was after only one thing. That was to find the answer for two parents who were missing their son."

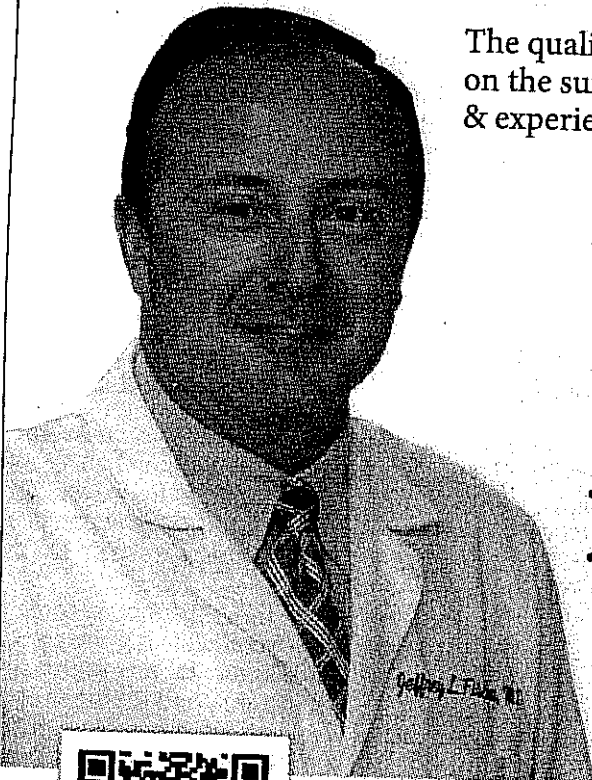

Froelich, who has spent 25 years as a drywaller, became a husband and then a father. "I started healing," he said. "My wife talked me into having kids. I never wanted kids. I didn't want to bring kids into a world so cruel." But father-chance, but maybe not Dewey." "The community failed us," said Froelich. "Why didn't anybody step forward and do something about it? You let this monster attack our kids."

"I want to educate the public about what happened. Nobody's aware of this stuff. It's not just Danny Heinrich. It started here," Froelich continued. "The only thing I'm trying to do is making the world a safer place."
